Frequently Asked Questions

What kind of treatment will I receive?

You will speak to the therapist before your session begins and the treatment will be designed based on your present needs.

Do I disrobe privately?

Yes. Your therapist will leave and you disrobe privately. You will then lie down on the massage table, (face up or down depending on the therapist and client) beneath the sheet and blanket and your therapist will then return.

Do I remove all clothing?

Usually the treatments are given with the client undressed, but you can decide what clothes to keep on during your session.

What should I expect during treatment?

Your therapist will use oil or lotion to massage your face, neck, arms, hands, legs, feet and back. The amount of pressure the therapist uses will be light at first- to warm the muscles up-and gradually increase to work out tightness and constriction. At any time, feel free to tell the therapist if you're in pain. Some soreness is normal, especially if you're new to massage. But your comfort is the top priority, so let the therapist know if you'd like a lighter touch. You should also inform the therapist if you're too hot or cold and the room temperature will be changed.

Will I be covered during the session?

You will be draped at all times and only the area being worked shall be momentarily uncovered.

What is the usual length of a session?

One to one and a half hours is average. But longer or shorter sessions can be arranged.
